

3rd Monday

Dear early 3rd Week People,

When I look back over Friday last week there are a number of things that struck me as important themes.

1. With Ke (mechanic) the whole area of fraud and fiddling in a self-righteous post-protestant society. He told us you could "buy" an MOT test. He told us you could sometimes fiddle insurance stuff.

2. Another theme from the garage was passive acceptance of gross injustice. Brits have done nothing strong to demand car prices similar to those across the narrow water.

3. The estate agent told us the same house (period + size) would be substantially more expensive in the villages than in town. What does this tell us about UK territorial values.

I suspect you must have quite strong feelings about the difference between the two schools we visited.

As you finish reading this could you work with a neighbour to review the abstractions from Friday and the themes that arose for you.

ps: I would love to receive a full letter telling me how what we are doing is affecting you, as a person. Looking at culture is not psychologically neutral.
