

Dear Y■,

Thank you for your letter which brings your voice to me in a serene way. I am delighted that this channel is open between us.

I was struck by the clarity of the way you used the intimate space round you to situate the entities taking part in your internal dialogue. You spoke of the way your son seems to have a role similar to that of your conscience, though you placed him a bit down and to your right.

In my own case I seem to feel a sort of identity between my second son and my father. I don't know clearly how this comes about, but it is strong.

I hope the book I lent you that tries to link NLP with Christian belief does not try to twist Christianity to fit NLP. It is odd to me that NLP does seem to become a sort of belief system for some people. I confess I think of it as a sort of very useful tool bag.

How did you go about getting more rapport with J■ and T■? It is clear from what you said earlier in the week that you think a lot of how to get the right rapport with your patients.

Let us talk together this morning at coffee break-time - I would really like to know what makes talking about faith and religion hard.

Yours

Mario