

Dear Everybody,

One of the things I love about NLP is that it allows me to marvel more and more at the diversity of the people I come in contact with. Yesterday afternoon was a feast of diversity ; when I think back to how C█████'s language monitor works, compared to R█████'s and A█████'s I feel fascinated and humbled. And yet I have the illusion that I know people! However much I try to really understand a person the brilliance of their ways of thinking and doing will only ever become a little known to me.

And next week you will be meeting x number of groups who will accompany you through into 1998. Some you already know (a tiny bit, anyway) and some may be new to you. You have a feast of people-learning and people-knowing ahead of you. I commend these people to your wonderment , to your amazement.

It is this childlike wonder in meeting another person that makes teaching non-repetitive and new each time. In a way, if I want to be bored by my teaching, I have to work pretty hard to get it to look and feel that way.

Good luck for 1997-8

Yours,

Mario.
