Dear J ■ C ■,

As I write this letter your boat should be berthing in Ostende and hopefully you will have been met there.

I have little doubt that the decision that you should return home was the right one, the one that your state of heart and mind imposed on us both.

Many people in our group were very concerned at your state of confusion and anguish. O ■ was particularly upset that you had to go. She wept. She felt she had a strong awareness of you. A ■ also wanted know how things were with you.

Tomorrow I need to give the group time to express their feelings and get things off their chests.

Pilgrims will send you the certificate of attendance that you may need for the funding people. Pilgrims has a relationship with you as a trainee here, and we feel NO need to communicate with your employer over things that have happened this week. Our contract over this course is with you and no one else.

I am sad for the many times, over ten days, that I caused you pain and confusion. To do this was not my intention and I did it unwittingly. My conscious intention at all times was to help.

I wish you a speedy and secure return to a positive and realistic state of mind, a state of mind in which contact with God is full, joyous and fruitful.

Thank you for the book be it either Lost in the Taiga or The Hermits of the Taiga. Both are good titles.

J ■ C ■, please feel free to stay in contact, by fax, letter or a hop over the water. This part of Kent is just a far West province of Belgium.

A big hug,

Mario.
